IN SPITE OF THE WEATHER, THE SAP IS RISING

Trump Denies Spring Has Come

March 20, 2017

WASHINGTON, DC ~ Armed Freedom
At 6:29 AM today, the exact moment of the arrival of astronomical spring in Washington, Donald Trump Tweeted: "Spring isn't here yet. Too cold. Cherry blossoms 90% gone. Terrible. But it's always spring in Mar-a-Lago! You should see it. Beautiful."

Responding to the White House Press Corps' immediate deluge of questions contesting her boss' Tweet, Kellyanne Conway defended the President's assertion. "Have any of you hacks even stuck your heads outside this morning?"

Zippering her jacket up for emphasis, she continued, "It's freezing out there! Besides, as everyone knows only on the first day of spring can you balance a raw egg on its end. This is because of the position of the Earth's axis and a change in gravity. I knew you skeptics would need proof, so I spent half an hour trying to balance eggs, and none of them stood on their ends! So the President is correct: it isn't spring yet. He'll let you know when it comes."

Refusing to take further questions, Conway said Press Secretary Sean Spicer would later be available, adding "He's an authority on spring and Easter and fun stuff like that."

L. President Bush embraces the Easter Bunny, played by Sean Spicer in 2008, R. Spicer was then the Assistant U.S. Trade representative.

At the afternoon news briefing, Spicer acknowledged the Administration was initially caught flat-footed when asked about plans for this year's White House Lawn Easter Egg Roll on April 17, but had quickly recovered. Plans are well-underway and results of the lottery for the 4,000 tickets will be announced March 31.

Asked if he would again be the Easter Bunny, with a wide smile he gave a good-natured denial, saying, "When it comes to that, I've already paid my dues."

Alas, if only the questions had ended there. But he was then asked if it was true that this year's Easter Bunny would be a real bunny. Spicer expressed some confusion about the question and the reporter clarified: "You know, a "Bunny" -- a Playboy Bunny like Victoria Silvstedt: the one POTUS had his picture taken with along with Melania at Playboy Magazine's 50th Anniversary soiree."

Spicer's good nature quickly disappeared and he turned red-faced with fury. "That's preposterous and you know it!" he shouted. "The White House Easter Egg Roll is an event cherished by parents and children all over the country. In fact, it's one of the few innocent events in this town, not that you care. All you fake news people are just so terminally cynical! Our President is all for it. And former President George W. Bush loved it. Why, he even had his picture taken with his arm around the bunny."

"Uh . . . Sean," another reporter began, "that's actually why we're asking the question. We're quite aware Mr. Trump also has a fondness for Bunnies. I mean, look here, Sean. Do you think this is photo represents a foretaste of this coming Easter?"

Spicer was successfully given mouth-to-mouth resuscitation by the lovely Margaret Brennan of CBS. Upon seeing she was his rescuer, he smiled broadly before again passing out. He was taken to Sibley Memorial Hospital where he is undergoing tests.
